Maria Taylor, Small Part Of Me

The music stopped
You watch the people walk away Your eyes reflected light that shone down from the stained glass windowpane Now we could talk
But the words would come out wrong
And there is no black or white But still, we just move on

And you're never gonna be the same from this moment you'll rise to a height only gained by a compromise share the glimpse of a new beginning
And now you've changed
But just a small part of me believes this
And you will stay
But just a small part of me believes this

And for good luck, we wear three keys to keep life prosperous There's a looming shadow that stands before us
And what was lost
Was the reason to believe
And the innocence and the will to retrieve it

And you're never gonna be the same
to a height only gained by a compromise
Share the glimpse of a new beginning
And you're never gonna be the same
from this moment you'll rise
to a height only gained by a compromise
Share the glimpse of a new beginning
And now you've changed
But just a small part of me believes this
And you will stay
But just a small part of me believes this
And just a small part of me believes this
And just a small part of me believes this
And just a small part of me believes this
