The sweet perfume of a lady
Flutters like the transparent wing of a butterfly
The whispers made in the shadow of her fan
Melt into the musician's overture

I tiptoe out onto the dance floor
The hem of my dress tugs and rustles
Halting, if that person
With blue eyes
Looks up

Without words, a conversation via glances
Engulf my hand,
In the veils of thin silk
Give unto me your cold fingers
That are without a shred of unease
My dreams of a yearning girl
Are coming to fruition in this moment

Our waltz is the twinkling of stars
A shiver similar to that of a far too beautiful night
Not knowing the name of the person, I feel
Those two lake-coloured eyes

Outside the gate of this white house
In the forest, wandering alone,
The light of the moon falls,
Lying on the jade surface of the water
And you are standing there beside the bank

Even without words, I hold out my arms
Embracing,
We dance in the shadowy extremes
The fish adorns his scales of gold
The birds sing in voices of silver
Where is this place?
Who are you?

Again tonight I wander about
In the thorny bush, my worries deepen and deepen
Again without words, your arms stretch out
And arrest me
Facing the shadows we dance
If this is a dream,
Then like being exhausted and never waking up,
Like we're never again going to separate,
My heart stops

Like a deep red rose
Being plucked by those hands
