The rubies are lizards' forked tongues
In order to trick him,

He readies them in deep rouge

The pearls are the gasping voices of mermaids,
Harvested on the rudder of his bed-ship
In order to decorate your ankles

How about one? whispers the swindler

Some tears of love have been bottled
And are turning to diamonds shall we go take a look?
This is Dali's wondrous Jewelry Store

Your wandering eyes are emeralds
Inlaid in the gold and silver starry sky
I am looking for a map that has no end.

Surely you will come and visit
This shop on Sapphire Street
He's peeping at your heart with a magnifying glass

Are you free tonight? says the glass-eyed magician

If this is a request that is free of pretentious love
Then he'll fasten it with a glamorously-tailored ribbon
This is Dali's mysterious Jewelry Store

In the end, until your heart and your body
Are sold out, the exit won't open
This is Dali's wondrous Jewelry Store
