Waiting For The New Light

he's sitting in the lobby of an african hotel a gun in his pocket, he's waiting for himself and this girl at the bar says: hey, what do you think c'mon, pay me a drink, be my karaoke king cause you're bigger than elvis and smarter than bob and you're singing songs you've never heard before and this is judgement day so tell me what you have to say but why don't you sing it when you're singing anyway tell me, why don't you sing it when you're singing anyway evermore i drove down the glowing bones of a shattered highway without an end and i watched your hair 'gainst the fields of wheat like a flickering flame in the screaming winds if our love was bigger than the 7 seas wonder how big our lifes in the end might be to fit in everything, all the goods, all the sin but we shouldn't complain as long's we're not givin' in we're all waiting for the new light... i am sitting in the lobby of an african hotel i'm waiting for someone who will never come and the girl at the bar says: angel, pay me a drink c'mon, c'mon, be my karaoke king cause you're bigger than bernhard and you're smarter than gold and i bet in your pocket is a 45 colt and this is judgement day, so why don't you stay and we're killing some time before it kills us anyway don't wanna be too negative, so please don't get me wrong it's just that life's too short and that your dead for too long and ain't it strange we care the most about the least important things i've been waiting here for so long since a million fucking drinks cause you're bigger than bernie and you're smarter than gold
and this is judgement day, so why don't you stay
waiting for the new light...
