Amorphis, Two Moons

Spring came in one day
The clouds in front of the moon
Tore themselves to shreds
So that two moons passed in one night

Winter went and spring came And the clouds tore off their clothes Washed them in the rivers of rain And naked in the dark they stayed Waited for their cloaks to dry

They darkened the face of the moon They would have tried to kill it If they could have reached that far As it spied on the clouds

Winter went and spring came And the clouds tore off their clothes Washed them in the rivers of rain And naked in the dark they stayed Waited for their cloaks to dry

They've taken off in the rivers of heaven They've taken off They've taken off
