Anathema, Lovelorn Rhapsody

I hear your voice It sings so softly Curious to join in A harmony to breathe forevermore

Joyous the one to hear a voice

In fields where grass grows tall Golden carpets swell and whisper Autumn trees will weep

Immune to pity, I've grown used to grief The eternal tear reciprocates

In fields where grass grows tall Golden carpets swell and whisper Autumn trees will weep

Dawn breaks open like a wound that bleeds afresh In bleak misery, the lifeless lie in squander

Love has left me, fled from me Fragrant lust waits beside and dies Like flowers that wilt without refreshment In midday sun I sit and bide time Adorning me, a lovelorn rhapsody