

Anekdoten, The Old Man & The Sea

The storm has raged here for hours, the water's plunging in on me
The remains of my creation is swallowed slowly down by the troubled sea into unconsecrated ground gone eternally, gone eternally

Feeder of my visions, carrier of my soul
The last hope for the dreamers, now crashing to the shore, pinioned and torn
In presumption and with my foolish pride
I challenged the storm, I challenged the storm

I'm the sole survivor,
the only one left alive Now my limbs seem to fail me and time has blurred my mind I'm doomed to this fate
The deal has already been signed and the hour's getting late The hour's getting late, much too late