

ApologetiX, Wherever You Will Sow

So lately you're wondering who really cares to take Christ's grace
Well, Christ taught that seeds of new life get scattered on Earth's face
If a grain of wheat shall fall, yeah, fall upon good soil
In between the sand and stone, Good News makes that crop to grow

Yes, I've learned that Christ's word will grow wherever you will sow
Wait a while, hold out hope -- it grows wherever you will sow

And maybe you're fried now, afraid you've wasted bags of grain
You watered, you tried to do your darnedest, all in vain
If as great a faith as Paul's can follow after Saul
Then there's hope for someone out there who you think rejected you

Yes, I've learned that Christ's word will grow wherever you will sow
There's all kinds of ground of though -- it grows wherever you will sow
Some it may hit the rocks, some it may hit the road
Some it may hit the thorns

I know now there's dry ground but lives you love might still grow strong
Give their hearts some more time and state the truth for all mankind

Yes I've learned that Christ's word will grow wherever you will sow
We all cry, we'll shout though -- as Psalm 126 will show
We might return back cryin' -- God's word is never useless though
Read Isaiah 55 -- by verse 11 you will know
It grows wherever you will sow
