

At The Drive-In, Speechless

mother nature never smelled so good can i taste the flower that you carry brilliant minds with pretty faces never cry pedestal is crumbling down now you're on the ground selfless days are way too many lie back, spread your legs and don't make a sound because no ones listening hiding bruises he brings you roses says i'm sorry, now it's ok no hard feelings no deep meaning you were once special, but just just for a day he hook and baits you to break you in two now no ones saying that it'll be alright promises when he says i love you face first to the floor now you just don;t know speak up! because no ones listening all those lonely nights you stayed up and cried sick to your stomach with butterflies he says come here and hold me close you never really seemed to smile wheni touch you sacharine sweet flavored drinks tastes so old this burning on your mind makes you feel so cold leave it all behind when you walk out the door we leave it all behind just cant let go no recollection of affection we're only safe from harm when nothing matters only 20 years have passed and you're already feeling old bell jar is ringing and no one understands the feeling of kicking a dead cow and hoping that it will come alive when everything is wrong you just say i'm doing fine she's reaching for something right
