

Barbara Mandrell, Years

faded photographs
the feelings all come back even now sometimes you feel so near and I still see your face like it was yesterday it's strange how the days turned into years

years of hanging on to dreams are already gone years of wishing you were here after all this time you'd think I wouldn't cry it's just that I still love you after all these years nighttime gently falls another day is gone

I turn around to find you're still not here I leave the hall light on in case you come back home but I've been saying that for years

it's of wishing you were here after all this time you'd think I wouldn't cry

after all these years
