

Beth Crowley, Don't think just run

You don't know yet where you're going,
if it's better than where you are coming from.
Settle down
this feels right somehow.

You meet twists and turns every corner,
but each step you take brings you closer to everything that's achingly familiar.

And at the edges of your mind, your mind
something is whispering to go into the unknown
and see what you find.

So deep breath in,
you're meant for this.
Everyone wants to know,
if you're the answer they've been searching for.
All eyes on you,
so much to prove.
Whoever you were back then,
you won't ever be again.
Remember how far you've come,
don't think just run.

You forced yourself to dig deeper,
when you redefined the impossible.
Can't give in to the hopelessness.

Some rules are meant to be broken,
you won't be confined by them anymore.
This might be your one chance at redemption.

It's all or nothing,
make your stand, you stand.
You reached the edge there is no choice,
now you have to jump
and see where you land.

So deep breath in,
you're meant for this.
Everyone wants to know,
if you're the answer they've been searching for.
All eyes on you,
so much to prove.
Whoever you were back then,
you won't ever be again.
Remember how far you've come,
don't think just run.

There might be peace on the other side.
Your memories on the other side.
Nothing to lose on the other side.

You won't be scared of the other side.
What might be there on the other side?
The world is new on the other side.

So deep breath in,
you're meant for this.
Everyone wants to know,
if you're the answer they've been searching for.
All eyes on you,

so much to prove.
Whoever you were back then,
you won't ever be again.
Remember how far you've come,
don't think just run.