

Bob Schneider, C'mon Baby

they say love finds its own way home around the snakes inside your heart and underneath all the bones and though the world may fold you in its pocket you wont ever bend your not the type my only love my only real friend and what about the girl who ran she ran so far away she could never find her way back home again she slipped and fell and broke her heart and now all she does well is fall apart so c'mon c'mon baby c'mon yeah and what about this starry sky i know i've used that tired analogy a thousand times but it still has the same strange effect on me i fall into the sky as if i were falling into a beautiful blue sea just want to stop the world and hide but theres no where to run and no place left inside just want to stop and catch my breath spend one second on this earth not scared of death c'mon c'mon baby c'mon yeah that's what i say but is it true the truth is everything is perfect and its not for me and you to figure out anything at all and all we've got is time but not much baby so fuck the brakes and get in line just want to make you see the light just want to shine as bright as brooklyn on a saturday night just want to scream until i drown just want to get so high that i never come back down and i know youll never understand you think you know me well you think you know me well think again im on fire and im insane and im all right dont stand so close cause you've been blinded by the light
