Brandtson, You Do The Science

I told you of a halfway house where we could meet to work things out I slept there on the floor for weeks you stayed between your comfortable sheets I sold you on an idea we'll speak in code as not be heard you looked me in the eyes and said I know the truth but still see the end I smile down and laugh as you hit the ground halfway down you always take the long was down break it up, you're always on the outs never finding out
