

Breathe, Say Hello

Outside in a winter world sits a woman all alone.
It's not the air that seems so cold, it's the love she's never known.
Outside in a winter world one lonely child roams.
Will ever loving arms unfold to give this soul a home.
So they're living on hopes and they're living on dreams,
While the devil is pushing them to extremes.
Can their spirits be strong, when for loving they long.
For the day will come when they must move on.
Where angels fear to walk, there you must walk, where angels fear.
Outside in a winter world there's a man who's lost his love.
So many secrets left untold should he turn and look above.
Outside in a winter world one old man sits alone.
He thinks of all the years gone by and what little love he's known.
So they're living on hopes and they're living on dreams,
While the devil is pushing them to extremes.
Can their spirits be strong, when for loving they long.
For the day will come when they must move on.
Where angels fear to walk, there you must walk, where angels fear.
There you must love, where angels fear (to love).
We all have troubles in our life that we must face.
We're merely players in this game we call the human race, the human race.
Where angels fear to walk, there you must walk, where angels fear.
There you must love, where angels fear (to love).

Submitted by Michael Hack