

Bright Eyes, The Feel Good Revolution

Come by when you get off work
I'll be sitting around doing nothing
Let's wait till the sun goes down
Then we'll drive off deep into the night
I don't care where we're going
As long as I'm going with you
The summer swells in us
With the heat comes a new kind of wanting
Cool nights never cooled us off
Lay around, wait for something to happen
But, it's three lonely figures
A bedroom, a basement, she's scared
Which one is sleeping
And which one is lying awake?
Yeah, which one is sleeping
And which one is lying about it?
Afternoon drags on and on
Movie nights that never end
We can hang out all night long
Lay in bed and talk to a good friend
Cause we only get older and probably forget what it's like
The university's quiet today
We didn't clean, we just talked in the bathroom
The girl always gets in the way
Ruined friendships, but others replace them
These opinions are poison
I've been drinking them all of my life
I could never replace you
Could never forget what it's like
Step out on a moonlit roof
The radio leads a feel good revolution
Cigarettes and my closest friends
I tell myself that I have to remember this Remember this
Tell myself that I've got to remember
Tell myself that I've got to remember this
To remember, to remember this
