

Callisto, Woven Hands

awoke from the slumber
the lapse of time
I have got nothing to show for it entertained but not enlightened recalling today for a trace of tomorrow being one without a lifespan new thoughts must follow the daylight draws to me and the surroundings are not what they used to be lights fill up space in a solitary place

walls consumed
all the knowledge harvested along the way watching the others this stagnant state gall the hardened heart a pace towards an early grey is there life before death?

planted firmly with an abundance of time and no sun if there is life before death, I live it through you
