

Christy Moore, America, You Are Not The World

America your head is so big America your belly is so big I LOVE you but I wish you'd stay where you live

In America the land of the free they say land of opportunity in a just and truthful way where the president is never black female or gay and until that day you've nothing to say to help me believe

In America you gave us the hamburger America you know where you can shove your hamburger don't you wonder why in Estonia they say hey you, yes you, you pig you big fat pig

Steely blue eyes with no love in them scan the world and a humourless smile with no warmth within greets the world while I who have nothing to offer you no no no but this heart deep and true you say you don't need

See with your eyes feel with your hands, please Hear with your ears know in your soul please For haven't you me with you now and I love you America, I love you
