

Donna Williams, Too Sensitive

Why do you hide your smile
When you got a pretty face?
You take away the best of you
And leave nothing in its place.

Emotions come to get you
But you try to run away
The games are pretty scary
If you don't know how to play.

Cause you are too sensitive

Run away and hide, little boy, little girl

Too sensitive

An ego made of glass
In a shattering world

In a shattering world

Why do you always hide away
The sparkle in your eyes?
And how many opportunities
Have you let pass you by?
You think that if you're not the best
At least no one will see.
You've found yourself a hiding place
To store your sanity.

You are too sensitive

Run away and hide, little boy, little girl

Too sensitive

An ego made of glass
In a shattering world

In a shattering world

You keep a fire in your heart
For no one else to know
Don't know the more you hide
The more your feelings show?

If your world's become a prison
Then the person with the key
Is the one who put you in there
That's the one who'll set you free

Cause you are too sensitive

Run away and hide, little boy, little girl

Too sensitive

An ego made of glass
In a shattering world

In a shattering world

In a shattering world

In a shattering world

In a shattering world

(repeat many times while fading out)