

Down By Law, The Last Goodbye

1,000 letters I have written but will never send here it is, another end and now we act like strangers, like we never met but I can't forget you said you were on the other line that day so I sat and waited for the callback that never came now where can I dispel the memories of your crime? where can I release the burn of bitterness inside? there's an astroplane of rage somewhere in the sky tonight I need to find it, to unburden, to try to set my head on right my heart feels hard even as the memories fade soon I'll be able to smile at all the times you took away they say that I'll get stronger from this dear god let them be right but I still see you when I close my eyes at night this is the last goodbye that's what you want from me
this is the last goodbye
so that's what you get
