

Endeavour, The Change Of Heart

Torning aggression, calamitous power for minds of those who grieve
Exceedingly mighty recovery to daylight of hope, this I percieve
Conquer the darkness prevailing the fountain, and tidal waves unfold
Go for the dream to diminish the twilight which I now behold

Where shall we lie when the glory has faded?
This is what we call amendment of soul
Whereas this dream of mine's finally ended
Someone will still carry on

Once before our deeds upright were far apart
Wherever it is you may go, carry the times in your mind
From disgrace into the field of plain regard is comprised within The Change of Heart

Unholy altar, perpetual sorrow, the nightfall hears a mound
Tale of the undying fight for believers of eagerness unbound

Where shall we lie when the glory has faded?
This is what we call amendment of soul
Whereas this dream of mine's finally ended
Someone will still carry on

Once before our deeds upright were far apart
Wherever it is you may go, carry the times in your mind
From disgrace into the field of plain regard
is comprised within The Change of Heart

No man of mind insane has made it through despair
By and by we might have tried to strain
Clarity is driving men insane

Once before our deeds upright were far apart
Wherever it is you may go, carry the times in your mind
From disgrace into the field of plain regard
is comprised within The Change of Heart