Eurythmics, Fools Paradise

It flicked like a dying flame Then before my very eyes you came And entered our world And you were born a king It's too late Welcome to paradise It's too late Yes you were born a king It's loo late Welcome to paradise It's too late A million things for you to learn But one by one those pages turn Like history itself But you were born a king Your pale blue eyes and velvet skin Fingertips and sideways grin

No photograph or microphone Could capture your elusive tone No waterfall or running stream Could be so pure as your daydream No china doll or crystal sphere Comes close to you, my child so dear In you I have a glimpse of faith A love affair with outer space A foothold on a mountain top A passion there that never stops No magazines radio or late night TV monster show Could entertain me more than you I want you to know That you were born a king Welcome to paradise Yes you were born a king Welcome to paradise
