

Every Man For Himself, Te Oranga

Life at the tail, never heads.

The product of a prescribed curriculum, we emerge again as the passengers in society, but never the drivers.

Educated to occupy all of the bottom rungs on the social ladder, we fill the jobs with low pay, status and power.

Our decisions are made for us.

We are the unskilled, unqualified, underachieving, underpaid.

Under the thumb and unlikely to break the cycle.

But change can be made.

A balancing of power.

Success in education and the work force can be the key to the top offices, the round tables.

Our shot at slowing the juggernaut from the inside.

Participation at society's highest level must be our aim.

Life at the tail, never heads.
