

Familiar 48, Endings

Reoccurring feelings tell me I'm wrong
Nothing worse than believing, it's easier to just move on.
Surrounding nothing with arms that needed so much more
Still there is something that both of us are searching for Well I wish you knew
But there is nothing we can do
You don't have to try to explain
We already know that we've changed
We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending
You don't have to explain
We already know that we've changed
We already know that we've changed
We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending this way
Nothing worse than pretending that we don't see that the end is here
This is all worth remembering, but living it is all too clear
Well, I wish you knew, but there is nothing we can do
We already know that we've changed
We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending