Familiar 48, Endings

Reocurring feelings tell me I'm wrong Nothing worse than believing, it's easier to just move on. Surrounding nothing with arms that needed so much more Still there is something that both of us are searching for Well I wish you knew But there is nothing we can do You don't have to try to explain We already know that we've changed We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending You don't have to explain We already know that we've changed We already know that we've changed We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending this way Nothing worse than pretending that we don't see that the end is here This is all worth remembering, but living it is all too clear Well, I wish you knew, but there is nothing we can do We already know that we've changed We just grew apart, there's no blame, no blame for us ending