Gary Brooker, (No More) Fear Of Flying

(Gary Brooker / Keith Reid)

There was no more fear of flying Once the final word were spoke There was no more tears of crying It had all become a joke Though they took a vow of silence Still the rumours quickly spread There was no more point in trying for the great affair was dead

There was no more fear of flying There was no more fears and pain There was no more need for spying They had everything to gain

There was no more fear of flying
There was no more tortured brow
They had dropped the safety curtain
They had killed the sacred cow
There was everything to live for
There was nothing to explain
They had left the scene, triumphant
They would live to fight again

There was no more fear of flying There was no more fears and pain There was no more need for spying They had everything to gain
