

Jack Russell, Always

she sits by a window alone in the dark patiently waiting a flame in her heart she keeps to a promise made long ago when her love was young her whole life to go always forever with you always
always forever with you always they met on the shore on a warm august night married november their future seemed bright then one rainy evening he left for the war on pages of letters their love they'd record
always forever with you always
always forever with you always he never returned never heard from again lost but still hopeful the government said days turned to years years into more she listened through the tears for a knock on the door now by the window a ghost in the dark a candle is burning the flame of her heart her waiting now over her life at an end she closes her eyes and she's with him again
always forever with you always
forever with you always
always i will remember
always forever with you always
always forever with you always always i will be with you always always forever with you
