

Jack Russell, No Time Left

i don't want to waste another moment i don't want to waste another day i don't want to think i could've loved you but now there's no time left for me to say i could never carry on without you i could never face another day and i know now that our world has changed forever and there's no time left for me to say the city streets i walk alone the faces aren't the same ones i've known all the shattered lives all the shattered dreams the memories forever carved in stone yesterday's behind us and tomorrow never knows
i don't want to waste another moment i don't want to waste another day
i don't want to think i could've loved you but now there's no time left for me to say
and i don't want to be here alone forever and there's no time left for me to say autumn's never felt so cold the winds have changed the very essence of our souls this broken life these broken dreams so many stories left untold yesterday reminds us that tomorrow never know i don't want to waste another moment i don't want to waste another day
i don't want to think i could've loved you but now there's no time left for me to say
that there's no time better than today
