Jim Ed Brown & The Browns, Mommy Please Sta

A mother went out on a party She left at home her baby son He cried and begged her not to leave him But she would not give up her fun.

She kissed his cheek and tried to soothe him But would not heed his childish plea She heard him call as she was leaving Please mommy please stay home with me.

The mother joined the merrymakers And soon was lost in trifling joy The mellow tunes and flitting shadows Made her forget her baby boy.

She danced and laughed and did some drinking The world for her was full of glee But now and then these words would haunt her Please mommy please stay home with me.

She left the party feeling dizzy
The smell of drink was on her breath
She hurried home to find her baby
In raging pain and nearing death.

The doctor came and looked on sadly The case was hopeless, he could see The baby died, these words repeating Please mommy please stay home with me...