Jon McLaughlin, Throwing A Line

I wanted to see all I could be in in your life, your life What if I fail though, I forget all the details on what's right, what's right

I'm throwing a line, asking for help This is more than I thought I think to myself That living in love is trusting above myself

You gave me your heart what a place to start All those empty scars and all those cold remarks We're always promising honesty would let us be inside each other's minds

I'm throwing a line asking for help This is more than I thought I think to myself That living in love is trusting above myself Everyday I'm constantly trying to sacrifice Cause I know despite me that living in love is trusting above myself

We wanted to feel with our hands something real But we just can't seem to stop being what we're not And fear you know it holds so tight Makes me feel I've got no right to speak what I really think

I'm throwing a line asking for help This is more than I thought I think to myself That living in love is trusting above myself Everyday I'm constantly trying to sacrifice Cause I know despite me that living in love is trusting above myself (x2)

Thanks to singerwscolio17 for adding these lyrics