

Kinky, Not Afraid

They say dreams enter from the feet, so they recommended bare feet to sleep
If you want Morpheus* with you

They say the trees wear their clothes backwards:
In the summer they wear leaf coats and in the winter they take them off.

I'm not afraid of the world, I'm not afraid to rollercoaster.

They say comets are like animals with large and bright tails and they gallop through the night.
They say rugs are just floors with overgrown hair and the broom is the comb, the vacuum is the Blow-dryer

I sleep and dream well, bare feet during night I'm a good rider of the comets light but even though I believe.
I'm a tree I can't stand outside naked with the breeze

*The Greek god of dreams - El dios griego de los sueños