The star light that is shining in gathers in the palm of my hand
I can't even find my faint hopes yet

With a blindfold on, I can't see yesterday's wind that was so gentle
It quietly wrapped me up, as though holding me around the shoulders

On the days that we hurt one another
Sad voices echo

One day, we'll be able to walk together to a far away land
We'll search for our dreams
We won't lose a single thing
And if even our breath stops, then we'll give up on everything

A thought runs through my head that things could be even more fun than they are now
I quietly embraced that way of doing things, you denied it

On the days that we hurt one another
Lonely shadows echo

We'll look at tomorrow, which is now somewhere, without covering our eyes

Certainly we'll have the same dreams
The two of us that knew sad things instead of loneliness
Are quietly unified, by a thread called warmth

On the days that we hurt one another
Our gentle arms are linked

One day, we'll be able to walk together to a far away land
We'll look at tomorrow, which is now somewhere, without covering our eyes

If continuing to live in, is the live that was given
One day, we'll have the same dreams
