Laura Branigan, Statue In The Rain

(Rick Palombi/Mathew Garey)

The days grow old like winters that creep slowly past And the love grows cold like icicles against the glass Now everything around me has changed The magic of your touch remains And I stand here feeling naked Like a statue in the rain A statue in the rain Statue in the rain Calling out your name

A photograph, a window to another time As I watch the past, I feel your body dance to mine Now everything about you has changed The phantom only feeds the flame So I stand here feeling naked Just like a statue in the rain A statue in the rain Statue in the rain Calling out your name

Now I'm cold from my head to my toes And I'm wet, I can never forget How your love made me feel so alive Thinking of you, my whole world is gray As I wander through the magic of facing One more day you're so far away

Now everything around me has changed The magic of your touch still remains And I stand here feeling naked Like a statue in the rain Just like a statue in the rain A statue in the rain Calling out your name Now I'm cold from my head to my toes And I'm wet, I can never forget How your love made me feel so alive Like a statue in the rain A statue in the rain Statue in the rain Calling out your name
