Lou Reed, Adventurer

You're an adventurer You sail across the oceans You climb the Himalayas Seeking truth and beauty as a natural state

You're a queen reborn Worshipped from above afar Some see you as an elixir An elemental natural seeking perfect grace

In a catacomb
Or cave of endless drawings
Prehistoric or religious
Your accomplishments prodigious
Seeking out the perfect tone

Your language so clear Your voice perfectly turning As in the city I sit yearning Blowing rings of smoke from thin cigars Or driving fast in foreign cars To capture your remains

You're an adventurer A turban wet wrapped round your head On the mountainside they predict your death Oh how you fooled them all

But subjects are a poor excuse When what you really want's a muse An inspirating knowledge of what comes before

Speeds of light
The momentary flicker of a candle in its wicker basket
Smoking wax - Facts!
Did you find that superior knowledge that eluded you in college
Did you find that super vortex that could cause your cerebral cortex to lose its grip

You're an adventurer
You were out looking for meaning
While the rest of us were steaming in an inspirating urban pit
An adventurer
You enter as I'm dreaming
I wish I'd never wake up
Differentiating scheming from my one true love

You're an adventurer You love the angles and the cherries The height and width of levies The natural bridge and tunnels of the human race

You're an adventurer
Nothing seem to scare you and if it does it won't dissuade you
You just will not think about it
You dismiss it and defocus
You redefine the locus of your time in space - Race!
As you move further from me and though I understand the thinking
And have often done the sane thing I find parts of me gone

You're an adventurer And though I'll surely miss you And of course I'll survive without you and maybe good will come of that But at this point I anticipate some grieving And although I know your leaving Is a necessary adjunct to what we both do

An adventurer Splitting up the atom Splitting up the once was Splitting up the essence Of our star-crossed fate

None who meet you do forget you My adventurer, my adventurer ... My adventuress