Lucinda Williams, Rescue

He can't rescue you Can't pull the demons from your head Can't lull you from your sleepy bed He can't rescue you

He can't protect you From the powers that will be The hours of insanity He can't protect you

He can't change you Change the summers of your beauty The thunderstorms within your purity He can't change you

He can't carry you Past the door of every danger Every foe and every stranger He can't carry you

He can't save you From the plain and simple truth The waning winters of your youth He can't save you

He can't fix you Your tears will always leave their mark From fears that stay inside the dark He can't fix you

What can he do But tie some ribbons in your hair And show you that he'll always care Thats all he can do
