

Maria Mena, Internal Dialogue

It must have been hard; staying in line knowing your influences did it all the time It must have been strange; living in blue and see me shut down as though it was an easy thing to do But you could tell where I had been by the way I held my gun Trying to write anything while being mocked by an off beat drum
But I was not honest
I was not healthy
I was not honest, honest.

You did the right thing covered your scars Challenged your faith and closed your eyes driving cars For all that they knew you were safe home But you went through hell whenever you were left alone

But you could see where I had been in the pictures that they took I tried to look positive at things, Faced myself but didn't look
That was not honest
I was not healthy
I am not honest, honest.

I wish you could see yourself through my eyes There's no need to cling to unnecessary lies The voice in your head whose spirit you stole left you for dead but you dug the hole

And I could see where you had been from the marks around your wrists
The red water washed around your sins but are you as pure as this?
No you are not honest
You are not healthy
You are not honest, honest.
