

Neal Casal, Pilot's Song

all the time you'd spent alone in your room with all the dreams you'd set aside they've all come back again and none to soon and some might say just in time but do you really need someone do you really need someone to stay the things you'd said to me I took to heart I didn't want to and I tried to let them drift away to stand apart and just for once take this in stride but I really need someone you know I really need someone

you know I really need someone you know I really need someone to stay ring that evening bell, oh, when all is well what it means, oh, but you can't tell if it's lost or if it's just falling down as all your pilots died one by one their ashes scattered to the wind you'll circle far'n'wide, face towards the sun you'll never fly this high again that's when you're gonna need someone you know you're gonna need someone

you know you're gonna need someone ...
