

Neil Diamond, Best Years Of Our Lives

Hey listen to the working man.
Can you hear the dream that resides in his soul?
And when you hear that poor man singin',
can you hear a story that cries to be told?
Wanna hear you say 'oh yeah.'
I need to hear you say 'oh yeah.'
It's time to stand up and be counted.
These are the days of our beginnings.
This ain't the time for the faint of heart, no.
Don't wanna lost the chance we're given.
These are the best years of our lives,
the very best years of our lives.
Oh yeah,
hear the song of womankind.
Carried 'till she ached;
now she's takin' her stand.
Says she's got the right to be right beside and equal with ev'ry man.
Wanna hear you say 'oh yeah.'
Need to hear you say 'oh yeah.'
It's time to stand up and be counted.
These are the days of our beginnings.
This ain't the time for the faint of heart, no.
Don't wanna lose the chance we're given.
These are the best years of our lives,
the very best years of our lives.
Say it, oh yeah.
Say it now.
And just say it right.
If you truly believe,
you'd be sayin' it right.
So say 'oh yeah.'
Got to say 'oh yeah.'
It's time to stand up and be counted.
Our better days are just beginning.
There ain't no place to run and hide to.
Don't throw away the chance we're given.
These are the best years of our lives,
the very best years of our lives.
Say it 'oh yeah.'
(say 'yeah')
Oh yeah.
(oh yeah.)
Say it 'oh yeah.'
