

Of Mice and Men, Shiver

I've declared war on counting sheep and
The memories that play on repeat where
The infinite and the finite meet

I talk to the ceiling but it doesn't speak
Another message in a bottle drifting out to sea
And the silence is a wave pushing us beneath

But I want you to know, want you to know

Do you shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake, hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
Then I want you to know that you're not alone
No, I want you to know

The more I hear, the more I see
The less in control I seem to be
The more I feel, the more I think
The less in control I seem to be

You don't have to say a word
The more I hear, the more I see, the less in control I seem to be
'Cause I can see your breath
The more I feel, the more I think, the less in control I seem to be

Do you shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
Then I want you to know that you're not alone

Do you shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
Then I want you to know that you're not alone
No, I want you to know

You don't have to say a word
You don't have to say a word

Shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
Then I want you to know

Do you shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
Then I want you to know that you're not alone

Do you shiver and shake when the sun begins to fade?
And lie awake hoping everything's okay
Praying for a better day?
I want you to know that you're not alone
No, I want you to know you're not alone, no

You don't have to say a word
