

Once Nothing, Whiskey Breath

Oh what a mouth you have.
It's such a sharp tongue.
It twists itself around lies, and tastes like alcohol.
You haven't moved in years,
Stuck in a coma state.
Well you better shake the dust off,
Cos tonight we're gonna dance.
You were always shy of the bright lights,
You looked much better painted in black and white.
But you got some red, on your party dress
Did I sleep with your clone while you watched from the back door?
Trembling as I hit the back door...trembling as I.
We used to clean up so well,
We used to sparkle like diamonds.
We used to shimmer like gold,
We used to burn brighter than super novas.
Been searching for years in hopes
To find a key but like a needle in a haystack,
I get lost in big cities.
My shoulders have grown weary from carrying both our weights
So let me kneel by the water to regain my strength.
I thought that I was an ocean but you've drained me to a stream.
So if I can't save you, and life runs its course...
Just know that you will be such a beautiful corpse.
