Opeth, The Night And The Silent Water

And so you left us Jaded and gaunt, some September Wilted with the seasons But hidden inside the delusion I saw you eyes, somewhere

Devoid of death The aura poises amidst (the storm) In solid tears I linger A parlour glade, moonlit sorrow

Lonely resting pools Relics of the moon-dogged lake Whisper: "All your words are missgiven"

Am I like them? Those who mourn and turn away Those who would give anything To see you again If only for another second

Your face was, like the photograph Painted white We did not speak very often about it What does it matter now?

Cloak of autumn shroud I gaze, dim ricochet of stars I reckon it is time for me to leave

You sleep in the light Yet the night and the silent water Still so dark
