

Pati Yang, Hold Your Horses

Blindness never felt this good before
Kindness deadly but precious like a child's reward
Been lately crushed like pills and cut into thin lines

Hold your horses and please don't do anything you would regret
Hold your horses and just tell your heart to take it step by step
And if you're patient baby stand by me till I am ready
One day I will lay your path with roses

So used to being confused, I am hooked on memories
With open wounds the size of black holes that never heal
You could have had me eating from your hand
But instead you said:

Hold your horses and please don't do anything you would regret
Hold your horses and just tell your heart to take it step by step
And if you're patient baby stand by me till I am ready
One day I will lay your path with roses

Hold your horses and please, keep your cards much closer to your chest
Hold your horses, let's not run before we dare to dance again
And if you're patient baby have trust in all that can be
Time will tell if that's what has been chosen

Numb and comfortable in that web of sticky lies
I watched the world sending signs
I couldn't move, I couldn't smile
Paralysed by fear I could be happy by your side...
