Peter Cetera, Scheherazade

He was the sultan of Samarcand
He had a harem of dancing girls at his command
He owned all the eye could see
Something was wrong, he wasn't happy
And then it happened much to his surprise
The loveliest woman he'd ever seen
He asked her name and she replied
Scheherazade

She was the daughter of the Grand Vizier A real beauty with the heart of gold, she was so sincere She made a date with destiny Marry the king, make him happy

He was enchanted on their wedding night Just a captive under her spell Spending a thousand and one Arabian nights

All of his body tingled with delight Hearing the stories she loved to tell She was a vision, such a lovely sight Scheherazade

He made a promise on the morning star He would change, throw away his scimitar So she came to stay And that's the why the story goes Until this very day
