

Rustic Overtones, The Heist

I walked in the bank - the black leather bag tucked tight beneath my arm.
When I pulled that .45
I looked into the bankers eyes
"Don't you dare pull that alarm"
I screamed hit the floor"
a woman screamed "please, help me lord"
and I thought about you dear.
If you knew I lost my job, and gambled what we've saved and lost
would you understand all of my fears?
For once in my life can I do this one thing right?
Felt the pressure tight
a weekend man, a weekend heist.
A Saturday I'd not forget Uncle Sam this money jam you put me in Took a human life to pay the debt
I didn't hear the guards outside, I heard a scream
I turned surprised, felt the smoking pistol in my grip.
The gun went off into the soft yellow tie that hung beside the banker's heart inside the banker's chest.
Lived such a short life, i hope he'll be alright.
For once in my life I feel so damned alive.
