Stephen Covell, Simulation

The simulation Swept the nation In every household Spared no one It took our children And made them orphans But that was just a shadow of what was to come

And we thought maybe we might resist

But in reality the one keeping us down was me Took me so long to finally believe

Got to let go To believe

I heard a child speak On a dead street He called a name out I once recognized Jump on the wagon Your feet are draggin Sign the papers this is your life
