The Tragically Hip, Ultra Mundane

come the ultra mundane of another life you know it by the trail of the nervousness your memories compress, your senses are sly and portions of your shadowiness on your everyday nights into northern lights, pour it all at their service start beginning by beginning, it's time, it's time, it's time a new tradition, a new beginning, it's time, it's time, it's time it's time to make you inside with a wristband, all right to see etobicoke coyotes to get pretend scars, to see like a pair to feel as welcome as a sneeze in a motorcycle helmet feel the ultra mundane of another life, a poet in the service start beginning, new traditions, it's time, it's time, it's time the demolition is beginning, it's time, it's time, it's time they're underpinning the tradition, it's time, it's time, it's time no perdition in the beginning, it's time, it's time but there's no time to ask, "hey, what you building? another ocean?"

you looked at me like i was eating runny eggs in slow motion maybe, maybe i saw you soften, baby when your angst had me over your shoulder you're a beleaguered old lady start beginning, a new tradition, it's time, it's time, it's time no tradition of dereliction, it's time, it's time, it's time no conditions, no sedition, it's time, it's time, it's time a new beginning, a new tradition, and at the end i'll burn so unkind you might ask, "hey, what you building? another ocean? another ocean? "