Tori Amos, Dogs

one dog buries a bone and then the other dog digs it up and finds a prize in store one dog dies and the other dogs go dig him up a tomb with his name inscribed and there on his tombstone carved so bold the words are clear and strong it says:

this one is for the eyes for the eyes of the other dogs who come it's for the eyes of the other dogs to come

one man digs a hole while another man shovels dirt inside another hole one man says hello while another one is leaving on a long journey to a place he'll return and there on his tombstone carved so bold the words are clear and strong it says:

every entrance has an exit and every doorknob has a twist i wonder what my face looked like before it looked like this?

and there on his tombstone carved so bold the words are clear and strong it says:
