

13 Winters, Dark Embrace

Midnight wrap me within your dark embrace,
let the light of the moon comfort me.
Deep within silence, I'm at ease in a graveyard.
Nothing but the dead within the earth.
I light a candle to light my way,
put red roses on my loved ones grave.
A sent of incense in the air,
letting them know that I care.
I walk the beaten paths,
in my deep thoughts.
I wonder if they are there,
right beside me as I walk this night?
Wind blows a creepy tune,
Sending chills up my spine.
In the blackest of clothes,
as if I'm in mourning.
If you look within you'll see a beating heart.
If you ask why I'm always blackend,
I'll say this is me, who I am.
I dwell within the dark to hide from you all.
I cry deep inside for those who are now gone.
I keep those people in my memory.
I gain more than my true idenity,
but this is apart of me and my personality.
I see a figure, his arms reach for me.
Across the veil of night.
Pulling me tight against him.
