1349, Nathicana

Goodbye o creature of folly The sun still sheds light On your towers Of steel and glass And they will bear silent witness To the futility of your achievements And the beasts will roam your streets Feasting on your cooling flesh Never again will your like be seen Such arrogance and folly The worm has conquered And you return to dust Millennia of evolution Science and religion Toil and suffering Still you never learn Now it is over And how futile it all was The dreams on mankind Rotting away And thus we all fade Weep not for your destiny No-one will be left to mourn 3000 AD