Adema, All These Years

One got addicted and the other ran away Some settle down a familiar place One lets go the wheel while the other one steers

One got the money that the other put away Some hung around and the others couldn't stay A few just follow their dreams while the others stood clear

After all these years After all these years

One found religion and the other lost faith One sold something that he never could replace Both looked back to see if the coast was clear

One hits the bottle till his problems go away The other never made it home from school that day Sometimes I wish I could just disappear

After all these years After all these years

It feels like some days that the sun never shines I can't decipher all these riddles and rhymes They're going down in flames They're burning alive

And I just can't take this anymore One look back at the past and I'm finally here

After all these years One got addicted and the other ran away Some hung around and the others couldn't stay After all these years One lets go the wheel while the other one steers After all these years

One found religion and the other lost faith One sold something that he never could replace (After all these years) Both looked back to see if the coast was clear
