All About Eve Miscellaneous The Garden Of Jane Delawney (bias Boshell) The poet's voice lingers on His words hang in the air The ground you walk upon My death will not be there My death will not be then

I take you through my dreams Out into the darkest morning Past the bloodfilled stream Into the garden of jane delawney Into her garden love

Always roses there Don't like it as you pass For a fire will consume your hair And your eyes will turn to glass Your eyes will turn to glass

In the willow's shade Don't lie to hear it weep For its tears of gold and jade Will drown you as you sleep Will drown you love

Jane delawney had her dreams
But she never did discover
For the flow that feeds the stream
Is the lifeblood of her lover
Is the lifeblood of her lover
And the purifying beam
Of the sun does shine her never
While the spirit of her dream
In the garden lives forever
Lives forever now
